

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource

Pedagogic hooks

- Finding out about the learners
- ‘Anything that gets students interested in data’
- Establishing a common understanding that ‘data can tell you something interesting’
- Starting with students’ interests
- Starting with non-technical explanations
- Working with visual metaphors
- Finding themes that work with as many different audiences as possible
- Using more experienced learners as a pedagogic resource
- Monitoring learners for their involvement and keeping pace